Ski in Patagonia

Define your ski level:

Level 1) Introduction to the backcountry - You feel confident in the trail, you can control the speed in black diamonds. You like challenging yourself and you are ready to learn new off-piste techniques. You will learn and improve techniques on and off-piste to improve your ability.

Level 2) Mastering the technique- You're not a novice on the off-piste, you can perform linked turns in different conditions in a comfortable way, but you need to improve your technique to achieve style and confidence. You will practice the right techniques in challenging terrain to gain more confidence on the backcountry.

Level 3) Refine technique - You feel confident in most snow conditions (off-piste) including deep powder and trees. You're looking to make great descents (and ascents), to explore untracked terrain and to feel comfortable on variable terrain and snow.

Level 4) Advanced Level / Expert - Great ski days! You have a great level off-piste and great physical fitness. You can ski in the most demanding terrain, couloirs, steep slopes, and speed. You can even learn how to kick an occasional cornice (depending on the conditions). Great days to remember!
